MOVEMENT MEDITATION PROGRAMS

Move, breathe, ground, restore.

P 1 of 2

Tai Chi and Qigong for mental and physical health and wellness

SCOPE

Movement meditation as defined here includes skills, concepts, and movements that cultivate body/mind connection, flexibility, strength, balance, stress regulation, calm, and intentional focus. We offer two program types: Wellness Program and Therapy Group. Therapy Group sessions teach Tai Chi and Qigong as therapeutic tools to develop psychological and nervous system regulation skills that are applicable to many life circumstances, from mild to very challenging. Wellness Program sessions teach Tai Chi and Qigong as traditional movement arts, including meditative, physical, and, where applicable, practical and martial applications.

THERAPY GROUP

This is a skills-based group that integrates gentle Tai Chi and Qigong movements, controlled breathing, and mindfulness concepts to foster nervous system regulation and mind-body awareness. Participants learn and practice skills and strategies for reducing stress, facilitating relaxation, improving grounding, and developing mental/physical balance, coordination, and flexibility. Practices are adaptable to individual mobility and ability levels. Diverse bodies are welcome. This is a skills group where the focus is on education and experiential practice of movement meditation, not a processing group where the focus would be on sharing and exploring personal emotions or experiences such as trauma (we have other groups for that).

Email us for the current schedule. An initial intake session is required before participation. Therapy group and intake session are mental health therapy services and billable to insurance.

WELLNESS PROGRAM

These community-based educational sessions provide instruction in the foundational principles, movements, forms, and practices of Tai Chi and Qigong and related arts. Participants develop balance, strength, coordination, mobility, body awareness, and movement skills while learning traditional principles and, where appropriate, practical and martial applications of Tai Chi and Qigong. Wellness Program classes are instructional and recreational in nature and are not psychotherapy or a clinical treatment group.
